The Good & Bad of Logo Design

Manufacturing

GOOD

GOOD YEAR

The shoe in Goodyear’s logo represents the speed and reliability that Frank Seiberling wanted to show his clients. The use of blue and yellow also suggests how the company aims to convey trust and optimism.

BAD

NEHEMIAH

This company sells products like Tide, Fabreze and Downy, the logos’ colors reflect those used in food-related marketing. The font is also too bold for a company that sells products that smell good.

Non-Profit

GOOD

AKRON-CANTON FOODBANK

This logo is simple and shows off two food types that are on the food pyramid. Red is typically used in food-related services.

BAD

AKRON COMMUNITY FOUNDATION

The font is too thin and could be hard to read from a distance or if shrunk too much.

Professional

GOOD

HOWARD HANNA

Uses fun colors and features a playful twist on two names that start with the same letter.

BAD

AKRON CLEVELAND REALTORS

The swooping designs above and below the logo overcomplicated the design, especially since a detailed skyline is incorporated.

Retail

GOOD

AKRON HONEY

Complementing colors, simple in design, and on point for the product being sold. The font is bold and straightforward, making it easy to read, even in small sizes.

BAD

THE BOMB SHELTER

The bomb shelter vintage store doesn’t showcase One specific logo; their website is set up well, but they should have a single identifying logo to use commercially.

Service

GOOD

SUMMIT METRO PARKS

The use of a muted green works well for a park system. They also use a maple leaf, which is a common tree type in the area of Ohio that the park covers.

BAD

AKRON PEST CONTROL

Too many uses of colors, design, and fonts. Many small details get lost.
